THE INJUSTICE FILES: SUNDOWN TOWNS

One-Hour Special Airst Monday, February 24 at 8 PM E/P

“Don’t let the sun set on you in a sundown town.” That’s what signs at the city limits of all-white communities warned when African-Americans were not allowed to live – no less visit – after the sun set. This method of exclusion was often held by an official policy or restrictive covenant. The practice of excluding blacks from American towns was so prevalent that, by 1936, it became the impetus for Harlem civic leader Victor Green to pen the Negro Motorist Green-Book, a guide designed to help African-American travelers avoid places where they could be harassed, threatened, or even killed. Today, it is illegal for sundown towns to exist on paper due to the 1968 Fair Housing Act – which made it a federal crime to deny equal housing opportunities based on race, creed, or national origin – but some believe that communities remain sundown by reputation and reluctance to diversify. In Investigation Discovery’s all-new Black History Month special THE INJUSTICE FILES: SUNDOWN TOWNS, filmmaker Keith Beauchamp takes a cross-country road trip to explore whether these exclusionary practices still exist today.

FINALES

MURDER COMES TO TOWN TV-14

Season 1 Finale Airs Monday, February 17 at 9 PM E/P

Beyond the boundaries of ordinary life, there is another world that lies just outside of town, where places have no names. Investigating forgotten communities and shallow graves past the perimeters of society, MURDER COMES TO TOWN reveals what can happen in these solitary and desolate places. Gripping tales of betrayal and murder unfold as told by friends, family, and neighbors of the deceased. In places mere minutes from town but millions of miles from civilization, normal rules don’t apply, and absolutely anything can happen.
